The Margin of Error (MOE)

Sampling error is the (random) difference between the value you want to know in the population and its respective value in the sample.

Characteristics:

- Intuition: "Repeated samples"
- A function of:
    - The sample size,
    - The sampling design, and
    - The size of the population.

MOE Example

Consider the proportion Q of observations in the population that have some (binary) trait. For a simple random sample of size N, the margin of error (sampling error) for the sample proportion q is:

$$\text{Standard error} = \sqrt{\frac{q(1-q)}{N}}$$

We typically calculate relative sampling error for a given level of confidence...

Population characteristics:

- Overall mean = 50.2 ($N = 22$)
- Mean for males $= 45$ ($N_M = 17$)
- Mean for females $= 67.8$ ($N_F = 5$)
- No differences by last name

Simple Random Sample ($N = 10$)

Sample characteristics:

- Overall mean = 51 ($N = 10$)
- Mean for males $= 46.7$ ($N_M = 7$)
- Mean for females $= 61$ ($N_F = 3$)
- No differences by last name

$$\text{Overall MOE} = \sqrt{\frac{0.51(1 - 0.51)}{10}} = 0.158 \text{ (15.8 percent)}$$

Stratified Sampling

Women are 22.7 percent of the population...

Proportional stratified sampling (say, select 3 women and 10 men randomly):

	Name	sex	namegroup	score	rando
1	ARNOLD, EMILY	F	AB	31	0.26093924
